Course Objective
Central to any discipline are the explanations it advances for why and how phenomena in its area of interest occur. These explanations are otherwise referred to as theories. The present course is essentially a survey course in sociological theories. Like most fields of inquiry, sociologists have not one, but many theories. Our primary objective in this course is to critically explore these theories with a view to assessing their relative strengths, weaknesses and prospects. The achievement of this objective may, however, require that we sacrifice some depth for comprehensiveness.

Student Learning Outcomes
1. Explain the key assumptions of each of the theoretical Perspective discussed in class.
2. Understand each theorist’s explanations of social Order and Social Change
3. Distinguish among theoretical perspectives and theorist within each perspective
