

Cutting eyes a photograph by William Whitworth.

Photography can be many things. In this case, it can be a simple and calm setting. He came across this cat in the cat alley at TAMUCC. The cat was asleep and as he crouched down the cat's eyes opened softly and gave him a look, the one you see now. The beautiful colors of the plants around the cat set them up perfectly and beautifully. William Whitworth has been capturing photographs for about two and a half years and while he loves to capture special moments for and between people, he finds the joy in capturing moments that he passes through.
